

POSTIMPERIAL JAPAN AND EAST ASIA

A Workshop at Columbia University

Friday, April 15, 2016; 1:00 PM - 6:00 PM

International Affairs Building, Room 918

KIM BRANDT, Columbia University

LEO CHING, Duke University

TAKASHI FUJITANI, University of Toronto

CHRIS HILL, University of Michigan

MONICA KIM, New York University

HIROSHI KITAMURA, College of William & Mary

LOUISE YOUNG, University of Wisconsin-Madison

MARILYN YOUNG, New York University

Interactions among multiple empires old and new—Chinese, European, Japanese, American—have shaped and reshaped East Asia since the nineteenth century. This interdisciplinary workshop interrogates the multilayered colonial and imperial history of the East Asian present by focusing especially on the decades after World War II, and the expansion of heavily militarized U.S. power in the region. Short presentations of new research aim to stimulate discussion of methods and problems for the critical study of postimperial East Asia.

For the full schedule, please visit: <http://bit.ly/1Pvop6s>

Co-sponsored by the Weatherhead East Asian Institute, the Dorothy Borg Research Program, the Center for Korean Research, and the Donald Keene Center of Japanese Culture